Thomas Hyde House
Annapolis
Private

c. 1760-70

The two-and-a-half story grey brick building that currently houses the law offices of LeRoy Bald dates to the third quarter of the eighteenth century, probably built for Thomas Hyde around 1760-1770. The coat of grey paint disguises the all header bond of the original two-story, three-bay front and the three-course common bond gable end wall. The building is supported on a roughly laid stone foundation with an excavated cellar. The Hyde house experienced extensive alterations during the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. The window and door openings have been reworked on the main facade with the jack arches probably replacing segmental arches. Dormers have been added to the roof, and the chimney stacks have been leveled to a height even with the roofline. To the north and east the house is extended with a two-story flounder roofed kitchen wing. Twentieth century modifications include a two-story infill on the front southeast corner, a single-story shed addition to the rear, and a complete remodeling of the interior.

Although altered, the building retains its historic integrity, especially as one of a relatively small collection of all header bond buildings in Annapolis. Historically identified as the Thomas Hyde house, the building is one of the oldest structures remaining in this section of Duke of Gloucester Street, and it contributes to the mixture of eighteenth and nineteenth century structures that form the streetscape.

Construction of the house is estimated to date to the 1760s during the ownership of Thomas Hyde, a shoemaker, who initially rented part of Lot 48 in 1757 from Edward and Henrietta Maria Dorsey.(1) Thomas Hyde first surfaces in the Maryland Gazette in 1747 reporting his runaway servant man, Samuel Esmey, a shoemaker from the West of England.(2) Several years later the Maryland Gazette published a notice that Thomas Hyde continues to make boots and shoes at his shop on South East Street, the original name for Duke of Gloucester Street.(3) He operated a tannery on a portion of this lot as well and selling leather products. Due to the all header bond facade and the three-course common bond of the gable end wall, it is reasonable to believe that this two-story, side hall/double-pile house dates from Hyde's ownership of the lot.

Thomas Hyde continued to operate a tannery and a leather business selling shoes and boots from this location, although in 1760 he announced through the Maryland Gazette that his place of business was now on Church Street. He operated a tannery until the mid 1770s and may have changed residences. He stated through the Maryland Gazette his desire to collect on unsettled payments due to a decline in business. In the same advertisement he offers his two story brick house for rent, "where I now live, suitable for a genteel family, a good well of water in the yard, and necessary out-buildings, garden, & c." He offered for sale as well a small parcel of European goods. In 1777 the State government rented property from Hyde for the Commissary of Stores, which agreement continued through the duration of the Revolution.

The South East Street property remained in his hands until his death in 1795, and he willed the house and lot to Sarah Walls, a niece, and after her decease to Hyde Ray, another relative. Sarah Walls married Francis T. Clements in 1795, and Clements was assessed in 1798 for "One Brick Dwelling House two Story 22 by 22, one Brick Kitchen Single Story 12 by 12 South East Street." Sarah Walls' sister Margaret and her husband Jesse Ray occupied the house at the time.

True to Thomas Hyde's will, the property passed to Hyde Ray (c. 1787-1835), a physician, who resided here with his wife Catherine S. M. Steele. The property was involved in a circuit court settlement between Catherine and her daughter Isabella in 1852, when the property was sold to the Trustees of the First Presbyterian Church of Annapolis for their use as a manse. At the time of the transfer the house was occupied by the Reverend James J. Graff. The house remained a manse for almost eighty years. During the mid 1930s and first half of the 1940s, the house and lot were owned by Archibald G. W. and Anna Ridout McFadden, who sold it to the Workingmen's Building and Loan Association in 1948. The property served as a bank until the current owner, LeRoy Bald and his partner Eugene Mackall Childs, converted the building into a law office.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Historically identified as the Thomas Hyde house, and also known as the former office of the Workingmen's Building and Loan Association, the two-story, five-bay brick building is located at 192 Duke of Gloucester Street in the center of Annapolis, Anne Arundel County, Maryland. The building faces southwest with the gable roof oriented on a northwest/southeast axis.

Estimated to date to the third quarter of the eighteenth century (c. 1760-1770), this two-story brick house was built in several stages. The western two-and-a-half story, side hall/double-pile portion of the main block dates to the eighteenth century, while the eastern two-story, two-bay section along with the rear wing are nineteenth and twentieth century additions. The eighteenth century section is supported by a roughly laid stone foundation with a fully excavated cellar. The base of the house is defined by an English bond watertable with a flat, single brick width profile. The front wall is laid in all header bond, while the side walls are laid in three-course common bond. The eighteenth-century house is covered by a steeply pitched gable roof sheathed with a layer of standing seam tin.

The southwest (main) facade of the eighteenth-century house is a three-bay elevation with a side entrance and flanking six-over-six sash windows. The replacement front door is topped by a single-pane transom. The door reveals are paneled. A brick jack arch stretches across the width of the entrance. The adjacent window openings are filled with six-over-six sash with vinyl clad shutters fastened to each side. Jack arches span each opening. The second floor is lighted by three unevenly spaced two-over-two sash windows also fitted with vinyl clad shutters. Finishing the base of the roof is boxed cornice. The gable roof is pierced by a pair of gabled dormers filled with six-over-six sash windows.

The two-bay section directly adjacent to the eighteenth century house is a 1960s infill assembled in all header bond on the southwest and southeast sides. On the southeast sides it is clearly evident where the new brickwork was tied into an existing wall of a nineteenth century wing. Prior to the construction of the brick infill, this corner was occupied by a single story porch. The street facade of the brick infill is marked by a pair of six-over-six sash windows on the first floor and a pair of two-over-two sash windows on the second floor. The roof of the addition is flat.

The northwest gable end of the eighteenth century house is dominated by a pair of exterior, three-course common bond brick chimney stacks, one of which is in the process of being rebuilt from the ground up. The top of the extant eighteenth century stack has been leveled off to coincide with the height of the roof. The extant eighteenth century stack has a single corbelled shoulder. Small window openings on the first floor have been bricked up. A four-over-four sash remains in the gable end. The edge to the roof is finished with a plain bargeboard.

7.1 DESCRIPTION

Thomas Hyde House
192 Duke of Gloucester Street
Annapolis, Maryland

The rear (northeast) elevation is partially covered by a single-story frame addition covered with asbestos shingles. The second floor is pierced by three sash windows and the base of the roof is finished with a boxed cornice trimmed with an ovolo profile bed molding.

A two-story, flounder roofed kitchen wing extends from the northeast corner of the house. An interior brick chimney rises through the north wall of the flounder wing.

The interiors of this building have been thoroughly reworked during the mid twentieth century. A metal stair replaces the original staircase, and sheet paneling covers the walls. There are no indications of any surviving finishes on the first or second floors. The attic is finished as well. Beaded inner edges to the dormers are the only historic finishes evident in the attic. Access was not gained into the small area above the collar beams.

Thomas Hyde continued to operate a tannery and leather business selling shoes and boots from this location, although in 1760 he announced through the Maryland Gazette that his place of business was now on Church Street.(4) He operated the tannery until the mid 1770s and may have changed careers. (5) He offered for sale as well a small parcel of European goods. In 1777 the State government rented property from Hyde for the Commissary of Stores, which continued through the duration of the Revolutionary War.(6)

The South East Street property remained in his hands until his death in 1795, and he willed the house and lot to Sarah Walls, a niece, and after her decease to Hyde Ray, another relative.(7) Sarah Walls married Francis T. THE subscriber having declined business, and has many accounts unsettled, will be much obliged to those who are indebted to him to discharge their respective balances; and, if it is not convenient to pay them, he hopes they will not delay in settling them by bond or note of hand. This reasonable request he flatters himself will not be objected to by any person who means well.

To be let, a two story brick HOUSE, near the public building where I now live, suitable for a genteel family, has a good well of water in the yard, and necessary out-buildings, garden, & c.

192 Duke of Gloucester Street is a good example of a typical, fairly modest colonial structure. The steep roof has 2 triangular dormers 6/6; 2nd storey windows are 2/2 (should be 6/6). 1st floor windows have splayed brick lintels as does doorway. Building has simple wooden box cornice and all header brick. (There is a 2 storey addition on south with flat roof). Building needs very little and because of age should be preserved. (also known as "working men's" Building).
